

The Graying of Us All

The Universal Truth, Death, Taxes, and Gray Hair.

The graying of hair is almost a near universal truth that begins in people of all races when they reach their 20's or 30's.

Family background has some influence on the age a person begins to gray, how fast a person grays, and how thoroughly gray a person becomes. For those of us in the majority group, the loss of hair color does not become noticeable until about the fourth, fifth and even sixth decades of our life.

I use the phrase "loss of hair color", to describe the "graying" of hair because the hair does not actually turn gray.

Instead, the cells at the root or base of the hair shaft eventually stop producing hair-coloring pigments (melanocyte cells) and the hair becomes white. When you see them among darker hair, they appear to be gray.

Some people retain their dark-colored eyebrows after the hair on their heads turn "gray". This is largely due to the fact that the eyebrow hairs have coloring pigments (melanocyte cells) that are in a resting stage with less turnovers than scalp hairs. It is a natural phenomenon to lose some hair strands each day from your scalp, but other areas of the body do not lose that much hair on a day to day basis.

This variety in hair patterns can cause a frustrating feeling especially for those who tend to gray early in life. Over the age of 35, 61% of men and 66% of women display some graying of scalp hair.

Today's color techniques tone, blend and cover all our graying woes.
